LETTER "V" IS CLEW

Arrests Expected in Case of Abandoned Infant.

LEFT AT FOUNDLING HOSPITAL

Father and Mother Then Drove Rapidly to Union Station, and Are Believed to Be in Baltimore.

Baby's Bib, with Letter "V," Is the Only Key to Its Identity.

A single clew, the letter "V," will probably lead to the arrest in a few days of persons who abandoned a two-week-old male infant on the steps of the Foundling Hospital, 1115 Fifteenth street northwest, about 3:30 o'clock Monday night last.

Detectives who have been working on the case nearly a week claim they have established the identity of the baby's parents, but have been unable to locate them. The police say that immediately after leaving the infant on the steps of the hospital, the carriage, occupied by persons believed to be the father and mother of the child, was driven to the Union Station.

This information was obtained from the driver of the carriage, who denies all knowledge of the identity of his passengers. He says he does not know where the couple went after leaving this city, but it is believed they are in Baltimore.

Detectives in Baltimore. Detectives are now in Baltimore shadowing persons whose names begin with the letter "V," and any whose actions are suspicious will be closely watched. The fact that the baby is apparently of well-to-do parents, who are anxious that it receive proper attention, is regarded by the police as an indication the parents will make inquiries concerning the infant and the care it is receiving and in this way betray themselves.

The police refuse to divulge the names of persons under suspicion. Mrs. Kilkeny, superintendent of the Foundling Hospital, is making every effort to assist the police in their investigation. The infant is still in her care. A peculiar side light on the mystery is that the persons who abandoned the infant dressed it in cheap clothes and soiled the baby's face and hands, with the intention of leading those who found it to believe its parents are in straitened circumstances.

The only piece of clothing of fine texture found on the baby was a small bib tied about its neck. In a corner of this bib was worked the letter "V." It was not until after the bib had been washed that this initial was discovered, furnishing the police a single clew.

Dead Skillfully Planned. That its parents carefully planned the abandonment of the infant is the opinion of the police. Entering a cab at a point in the busy section of the city, the couple ordered the driver to drive down Fifteenth street. When about a block from the Foundling Hospital the cabman was told to stop.

The man, who held the baby in his arms, left the cab, walked down Fifteenth street to the Foundling Hospital, left the baby on the steps, and disappeared, after ringing the doorbell. Miss Catherine Leyban, an attendant at the hospital, opened the door and discovered the infant. She stepped into the street in an effort to apprehend the person who left the baby, but failed to see him. The man returned to the cab on a run, and, entering the vehicle hurriedly, ordered the driver to go to Union Station. Here both man and woman alighted and disappeared.

STATION SITE FIXED

Long Controversy in Southwest Settled by Railroads.

SEVENTH STREET IS CHOSEN

Southern Railway Declares It Has
Most at Stake, and Suggests Action Taken—Structure Will Be Built Without Grade Crossings
and with a Subway Tunnel.

After hanging fire for some many months, the southwest station site problem has been settled. The structure will be located at the southeast corner of Maryland avenue and Seventh street.

Thus the final chapter has been written in a controversy which divided the Board of District Commissioners, which sent the Pennsylvania Railroad to the courts to annul an order of the Commissioners, and which has been the source of much vexatious delay for thousands of weary commuters from Virginia.

The site problem has been decided in favor of Commissioners Macfarland and West, as against former Commissioner Morrow and the Pennsylvania Railroad. The end of the dispute is all the more significant in that it came on the initiative of the railroad themselves.

Two Sites Proposed.

When the question was first broached there were two sites under consideration, one at Seventh street and another at Fourteenth street. The Commissioners at first consented to the Fourteenth street location, but shortly afterward, finding that public opinion was in favor of the other, reversed the decision, and declared for a station on Seventh street. Engineer Commissioner Morrow dissented, claiming that the Commissioners had no right to revoke a decision once given.

The Pennsylvania Railroad appealed to the courts and won a decision which apparently gave them the right to build in Fourteenth street. It was at this juncture that the Southern Railway placed an entirely new aspect upon the long drawn-out controversy. "We have the most at stake," said the Southern. "The Pennsylvania does not have a single passenger train stopping in the southwest section. We carry thousands of suburbanites into Washington from Virginia. There is no doubt that a Seventh street station will be vastly more convenient for them and far easier for us. Seventh street is the natural radiating point for the outside traffic."

Is More Central. The fact that the Seventh street and Maryland avenue location, just skirting the Mall, is more central, that two cross-town lines are within a short distance, that the Center Market is but four blocks away, that it furnishes facilities for transporting the influx of commuters which could not possibly be duplicated at Fourteenth street, were facts which appealed to the Southern Railway and were not without attraction to the Pennsylvania.

The Southern won its point, and the plans were informally sketched out yesterday, after they were approved by Commissioner West and Engineer Commissioner Cowley.

Roughly speaking, the plans provide for a long, narrow, elevated platform, level with the railroad tracks, running along Maryland avenue, and a stairway and a subway tunnel leading to a commodious waiting room in Seventh street. There is a general similarity between this plan and that of the transfer station of the subway and elevated roads in New York. All crossing of tracks is eliminated. A waiting room is provided at the ground level, with protection from the soot and cinders of passing trains, especially freight trains.
